This document sets out what supporters are and where we work with them.

About Centre

Centre is a think tank and pressure group. This means we research new policy ideas and run policy related campaigns. We mainly include a mixture of One Nation Conservatives, Social Democrats and Social Liberals. We also have those from the left and the right who work with us on specific policy areas.

What being a Supporter means

Whilst this allows you to be involved with our work, We have politicians with a range of political views. We also state on our website that our supporters don't necessarily agree with all of our policies or goals.

How you can be involved in Centre

Our supporters range from MPs to council candidates. As a result, our supporters also have varied amounts of time to be involved in our work.

For supporters with less time, we are happy for them to simply sign up to our network without contributing time. For those with more time there are opportunities to appear on our podcast, to speak at our events as a panellist, to contribute to papers including forewords, to write articles and to get involved with our campaigns. These are great opportunities to connect with the other organisations and politicians we work with.

Our work

Centre has worked with MPs, former Ministers, party leaders, members of devolved parliaments and events on a huge range of projects. We also work with businesses, academics, individuals in law and partner organisations.

Who can join our supporters network

Our supporters network already includes MPs, members of devolved institutions councillors and candidates. We also welcome those who are involved in politics in other capacities including journalists.
